

126631 - It is not permissible to sell movable items until after one has taken possession of them

the question

There is a company which buys furniture and building materials for those that want them. The customer goes to the company and specifies the furniture or building materials that he wants. The customer pays the first instalment, like instalments for cars, and the remainder of the money is paid in monthly instalments, with a rate of as much as 10% for the company. The company gives the customer the receipt so that he can go to the furniture company and get the furniture himself, then the instalments are paid to the company who made arrangements for these instalments. What is the ruling?.

Detailed answer

Praise be to Allah.

The company does not have the right to sell furniture or other movable items until after the transaction has been completed and the sold item has been moved to their property and has been transferred from the possession of the seller to another place, then the transaction is completed after that.

As for paying a deposit to the company before that, it is not permissible and they do not have the right to sell anything until after they have taken possession of it and moved it from the seller's place to another place. And Allaah is the source of strength. End quote.
