

127179 - Is Divorce Issued by a Non-Muslim Judge or Court Valid?

the question

I was married for 6 years --a troublesome marriage but alhamdulillah.my husband was a drug addict --although i tried to help-nothing changed .situation was unbearable.and for the sake of my children and me .we separated.after two years and no change on his side ,i sought divorce from the courts as he refused to give it.i got fasaq (divorce took place). It's been a few years now. I wanted to know, what that divorce is considered as -is it 1 talaq?things are changing on his side ,i was wondering if i wanted to get back with him, what's the process,- is it possible to get married again,or not?.

Summary of answer

- If you went to the court that is based on the man-made law of the land and the court obliged your husband to issue a divorce, and he spoke the word of divorce or he wrote it down with the intention of divorce, then it counts as such.
- If he did not utter or write the word of divorce with the intention of divorce, and it was the court that issued a ruling of divorce, then a divorce ordered by a non-Muslim judge does not count as such.

Detailed answer

Praise be to Allah.

Can a woman ask for divorce?

It is permissible for a woman to ask for divorce if the husband persists in committing immoral actions, such as drinking alcohol or taking drugs.

If the husband refuses to give her a divorce, she may refer the matter to the Islamic judge so that he can force the husband to divorce her or he himself can issue a divorce, if the husband refuses to give a divorce.

If there is no Islamic judge, she may refer the case to the Islamic authorities in her country, such as the Islamic Centre, so that they can convince the husband to issue a divorce or ask him to let her go by means of Khul` . And it is permissible to have that Shar`i divorce documented after that in the court that is based on the man-made law of the land, because there is a need for that documentation.

Is divorce issued by non-Muslim judge or court valid?

If you went to the court that is based on the man-made law of the land and the court obliged your husband to issue a divorce, and he spoke the word of divorce or he wrote it down with the intention of divorce, then it counts as such.

If he did not utter or write the word of divorce with the intention of divorce, and it was the court that issued a ruling of divorce, then a divorce ordered by a non-Muslim judge does not count as such .

The jurists unanimously agreed that being Muslim is an essential condition of the judge who judges cases among the Muslims, because serving as a judge is a kind of Wilayah (authority), and there is no Wilayah for a non-Muslim over a Muslim.

Ibn Farhun (may Allah have mercy on him) said: "Al-Qadi `Iyad (may Allah have mercy on him) said: The conditions of serving as a judge, without which the judgement cannot be valid and without which the appointment of the judge cannot be valid, are ten: being a Muslim; being of sound mind; being male; being free (not a slave); being an adult; being of good character; having knowledge; being one person (i.e., you cannot have two judges at the same time); not being blind or deaf; and not being mute or nonverbal. The first seven are essential for the appointment of the judge to be valid, and the last three are not essential to it being valid, but if they are not met it means that the judge should be dismissed. A judgeship of a disbeliever is not valid, according to consensus, and neither is that of one who is insane." (Tabsirat Al-Hukkam, 1/26) (See also Al-Mawsu`ah Al-Fiqhiyyah, 33/295)

The final statement of the second conference of the Fiqh Council of North America, which was held in Copenhagen, Denmark, with the Muslim World League, 4-7 Jumada Al-Ula 1425 AH/22-25 June 2004 CE, stated that: "A concession is granted allowing one to refer to the court that is based on the man-made law of the land, when doing so becomes a means of getting one's rights or warding off wrongdoing in a land that is not ruled by Shari`ah, on condition that those who have knowledge of Shari`ah be consulted to determine the Shar`i ruling that is applicable to a given case, and that the demand be limited only to seeking what Shari`ah allows and trying to implement it."

It also says:

"Seventh clause: The extent to which civil divorce done in lands outside the Muslim world is valid:

The statement explains that if a man divorces his wife in a Shar`i manner, there is nothing wrong with documenting it in the court that is based on the man-made law of the land. But if there is a dispute between the spouses about the divorce and connected issues, the Islamic centres may play the role of the Muslim judge where there is none, after doing all legally required procedures. Referring to the man-made judicial system to end the marriage does not on its own dictate the end of the marriage from the Shar`i point of view. If the woman gets a civil divorce, then she may go to the Islamic centre and refer the matter to people who are qualified to deal with these matters and have sufficient knowledge, to complete the matter from the Shar`i point of view. One cannot make the excuse that this is a matter of necessity because Islamic centres are available and easy to refer to in various regions."

Based on that, you have to refer to the Islamic centre in your city, and they can take care of the matter.

When can a husband take back his wife after divorce?

If a woman has been divorced by her husband with a first or second pronouncement of divorce and the `Iddah has ended, it is permissible for him to marry her again with a new marriage contract and a new dowry in the presence of her guardian and witnesses.

But if it was the third pronouncement of divorce, she is not permissible to her first husband until she has been married to someone else, in a genuine marriage, not a Tahlil marriage (one which is aimed at making it permissible for her to go back to her first husband), then the second husband dies or divorces her.

And Allah knows best.
