

175366 - Her husband died and she has some questions about her children, their inheritance and maintenance, and can she remain a widow?

the question

I am 24 yrs old and my husband was 28 yrs old. He died in a car accident a couple months ago; Allah yarhamhu wa askanahu to the highest stage of heavens, in sha Allah. I am very very depressed because we are too young and have 2 boys. Before my husband died, he bought us a house and a third of a halal gas station. I have many questions in my mind and I understood when you said do not write more than 1 question but i am going through a lot now and I want to do what is best for the sake of Allah. I do not want Allah to hate me if I did something wrong, this is why I am seeking help from you guys to get my questions answered. My husband's family is in Yemen and I brought my husband to the United States. So li live in the United States. But as for the halal gas station; i hear it goes to my kids since they are boys; but i am trying to do what is good so I decided to let the gas station run and split the income half for me and my kids and half for his family in Yemen. Like I said, I don't want Allah to hate me if this is wrong because he used to support his family in Yemen. Also, at what age should I give them their wealth. I also want to know if I am allowed to ask Allah to keep me as a widow until we reunite in sha Allah in Jannah. I know I am too young but I love my husband so much and I only want to be with him and no one else. And is it true if I raise my orphan children as well as I can in Islam, I may be able to go to heaven with Muhammad (peace and blessings be upon him). And since I live in the USA, I get social security income from the government; am I allowed to use some of that money for Hajj for myself and for my husband; I will try to use as much money from the gas station for Hajj but if i didn't make enough money is it ok if I use money from the government? Is my husband considered a shaheed since he died from a drunk driving car accident? I hope Allah reunites us together in the Hereafter. I also want to know if I am allowed to visit my husband's grave with my kids and the last question, what is the best way to raise my boys in an Islamic way; one is 4 yrs old and one is a 1 yr old.

Detailed answer

Praise be to Allah.

May Allah increase your reward and have mercy on your husband; may He grant you patience and help you to raise your children.

The answers to your questions are as follows:

Firstly:

Whatever your husband has left behind of wealth, property, a business and so on belongs to his heirs, who are: you, your two children, your husband's father or grandfather, and also his mother or grandmother if they are still alive.

Your portion of his share in the gas station – and any other wealth he left behind – is one eighth, and the rest goes to your children, unless your husband's father is alive, in which case he has one sixth, or if his mother is alive, she has one sixth. The grandfather takes the father's share if the father is not alive, and the grandmother takes the mother's share if she is not alive.

Secondly:

You have to look after your children's wealth and you should invest it in a way that will benefit them. It is not permissible to give it to them until they reach maturity. Please see the answer to question no. 13262

Thirdly:

Your kindness towards your husband's family is a righteous deed, but it should be from your wealth and your share of the gas station. It is not permissible to give it from your children's share, because the one who is looking after an orphan's property has no right to give charity or gifts from it.

Fourthly:

You should not ask Allah, may He be exalted, to let you remain a widow, because this is contrary to what is encouraged in Islam. Rather you should get married, and ask Allah for a righteous husband, because of the many benefits and noble purposes of marriage, which include: seeking to have righteous children and form a Muslim family; protecting oneself from falling into haram or into the traps of the Shaytan; and strengthening the bonds between Muslims through ties of marriage. If someone proposes to you who is religiously committed and of good character, and you think it most likely that he will take care of your children and help you to bring them up, then you should accept him. This is better for you than remaining without a husband, especially at your age and in the country where you are living.

Fifthly:

Sponsoring orphans, bringing them up and helping them are among the greatest means of drawing closer to Allah, and they are a means of being with the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) in Paradise.

It was narrated from Sahl ibn Sa'd that the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) said: "I and the one who sponsors an orphan will be in paradise like this" – and he gestured with his forefinger and middle finger (to signify closeness).

Narrated by al-Bukhari, 5659

It was narrated that Abu Hurayrah said: The Messenger of Allah (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) said: "The one who sponsors an orphan, whether it is a relative of his or not, he and I will be like these two in Paradise," and Malik pointed with his forefinger and middle finger.

An-Nawawi (may Allah have mercy on him) said: With regard to the phrase "whether he is related to him or not", "related to him" means if he is a relative, such as his grandfather, mother, grandmother, brother, sister, paternal uncle, maternal uncle, paternal aunt, maternal aunt, or other relatives. "Or not (related to him)" means if he is a stranger (a non-relative). Sharh Muslim, 18/113.

Sixthly:

There is nothing wrong with you benefiting from Social Security and using that money to go for Hajj, so long as you are entitled to it according to the conditions laid out by the government.

Seventhly:

If a person dies in a car accident, there is the hope that he will be a shaheed (martyr), because he is like one who dies beneath a collapsed building. Please see the answer to question no. 45669

Eighthly:

There is a difference of scholarly opinion concerning women visiting graves. Some of them say that it is permissible, some say that it is makrooh (disliked) and some say that it is haram (prohibited). If you refrain from doing that, that will be better for you and more on the safe side, especially in this situation you describe, when the calamity is still recent. Such actions will stir up your grief again and may cause you to do something that is contrary to Islamic teaching.

There is nothing wrong with your children visiting their father's grave, because visiting graves is mustahabb (encouraged) for people other than women.

Ninthly:

You must pay close attention to your children at this age, and bring them up with good morals and values. Teach them to memorise the Book of Allah, may He be exalted, and to love good; make them get used to offering prayer regularly. You should also get in touch with Islamic centres and some righteous sisters; this will be very good for you and your children.

We ask Allah, may He be exalted, to help and guide you.

And Allah knows best.
