

271414 - Ruling on recording university lectures without the permission of the lecturer

the question

Is it permissible to record university lectures despite the objection of the lecturer? Please note that I am recording them so that I can write down what he says in the lectures, because I cannot write down what he says as he speaks so quickly, and there is nothing in the lecture except what is in the curriculum.

Detailed answer

Praise be to Allah.

It is not permissible for a Muslim who pays attention to matters of trust and hates betrayal to record the words of a speaker without his permission or without his knowledge, no matter what the type of speech, whether it is religious or worldly, such as fatwas, scientific discussions, financial matters, and so on.

It is proven in the hadith of Jaabir ibn 'Abdillah al-Ansaari (may Allah be pleased with him) that the Prophet (blessings and peace of Allah be upon him) said: "If one man speaks to another and looks around (to make sure no one is listening), then that is a trust (amaanah)." Narrated by Ahmad, Abu Dawood and at-Tirmidhi.

What is meant by his looking around is that it is clear from the actions of the speaker that he is being cautious, by looking around, right and left, to make sure that no one can hear what he is saying. Thus what your companion says to you is a trust for the listener, that he has entrusted him with. If he tells someone else about it, then he has gone against the command of Allah, as he has disclosed the trust to people who are not entitled to receive it, and thus he becomes a wrongdoer. What he should do is conceal it, because when the person who told it to him looked around, that was like a gesture telling him not to tell anyone else. They said: This is a very concise expression, yet full of meaning, because the word translated here as looked around is very concise, and is encouraging us to observe good etiquette when mixing with people, to treat people well, to conceal secrets and maintain friendships, and it is a warning against spreading malicious gossip that could lead to resentment, as is quite clear.

Ar-Raaghib said: Confidential talk is that which is meant to be kept private, which may be understood directly, such as if you say to someone else: Keep what I tell you to yourself; or it may be indirect or circumstantial, such as if the speaker takes the opportunity of being alone with you, or he lowers his voice, or tries to conceal it from others in the gathering. This is what is meant in this hadith. End quote.

If you record his words without his permission or his knowledge, then this is a kind of treachery and a breach of trust.

If you then spread these words to other people, this exacerbates the treachery and violation of the trust.

Conclusion: Recording someone's words – on a phone or otherwise – without the knowledge or permission of the speaker is evildoing and a betrayal, and undermines one's good character and dignity.

End quote from Adab al-Haatif by Shaykh Bakr Abu Zayd (may Allah have mercy on him), p. 28

I put this question to our shaykh, 'Abd ar-Rahmaan al-Barraak (may Allah preserve him), and he replied:

They have no right to record without his consent or knowledge.

And Allah knows best.
